

Les enfants ont besoin de terrains de jeux , pas de champ de mines

Picture this: you're on a walk near your home, when you spot a grenade on the ground. What do you do? Now picture a child in the same scenario. Do they know what to do?

Children in Artsakh (Nagorno-Karabakh) don't have the luxury of not knowing what to do if they come across a grenade or other remnant of war. That's why The HALO Trust travels to every single school in Artsakh every year to teach children safe practices, in case they encounter an unexploded ordnance.

When you donate, you're employing local deminers who will remove deadly objects like grenades and landmines from the land, so that no child has to encounter them. Plus, every dollar you donate will be doubled by an anonymous donor.
