

John Bolton accuse le pdt Trump d'être motivé par des intérêts personnels ou de business

L'ancien conseiller à la sécurité nationale John Bolton accuse le président Donald Trump d'être motivé principalement par ses intérêts personnels ou financiers dans ses rapports avec La Turquie.

Il interroge sur les relations de business du pdt Trump ,dnas les Affaires étrangères des USA.

WASHINGTON, DC — Former national security adviser John Bolton has accused President Donald Trump of being motivated primarily by personal or financial interests in his dealings with Turkey, while questioning whether Trump should apply his business acumen to foreign policy.

NBC News reported Tuesday that Bolton made the comment at a private gathering last week in a global investment event organized by Morgan Stanley, at which he also reportedly took shots at Jared Kushner and Ivanka Trump, who remain White House aides.

Bolton recalled how there was strong bipartisan support in Congress to sanction Turkey after Erdogan purchased a Russian missile defense system, defying the United States and NATO allies. But Trump didn't share their appetite.

Bolton, who left the White House in September, hinted there was a reason for that. The Trump Organization has a property in Istanbul, Turkey's capital.

More recently, after a phone call with Erdogan, Trump agreed to remove U.S. forces from northeast Syria to let Turkish forces come in. This put the U.S.'s Kurdish allies in jeopardy of being killed by the Turks.

T...

source : Massis media